Dear E. Denise Simmons,

I am a graduate student at MIT and have lived in Cambridge for the past five years, though I recently relocated to another city.

I am contacting you to express my support of the Mass Against HP campaign in the strongest terms. As someone who cares deeply about the rights of immigrants, the incarcerated, and Palestinians, and as a Jewish American myself, I believe that Mass Against HP offers a powerful and strategic message. Given the city of Cambridge's impressive history of championing activist causes on a global scale, it is in the community's favor to terminate the contracts with HP because the company benefits from the violation of human rights within the United States and Israel-Palestine. Putting economic pressure on the company to halt HP's questionable work with prison systems, immigration facilities, and throughout the Middle East is a logical way to send a clear signal that human rights matter, and that technologies should be used ethically.

I hope that you and your fellow City Councilors can recognize the gravity of these situations, why Mass Against HP proposes an important course of action, and why the city of Cambridge must seriously examine its relationship to these abusive systems of power.

Thank you for your consideration.

Best,

Jackson Davidow
